PROFESSIONAL ADVERTISING - FOREIGN OPPORTUNITIES

CPD QUESTIONS

The crevice anemone Anthopleura michaelsoni lives partly buried on sand in rock crevices, its sticky column characteristically bedecked with gravel and its gaudy mouth and speckled tentacles exposed to capture passing prey. Much of its food comes from either microscopic animal life floating in the plankton, or from mussels that are torn off the rocks by waves and tumble into the grasp of its tentacles. Like all anemones, its tentacles are armed with stinging cells but, apart from a mild, short-lived itching sensation, they are harmless to humans.
